heard on a decision facing Americans about the H1N1 vaccine. . .

H1N1 Community Engagement Meeting

The Secretary of Health and Human Services expects the federal government to start a voluntary vaccination program against the 2009 H1N1 (swine flu) virus this fall.

The Centers for Disease Control and Prevention (CDC) and state and local health partners are developing plans for the vaccination program. A public dilemma being faced is whether the US should adopt a full-throttle, go slow, or intermediate intensity program.

The CDC wants the public to discuss how intense a national immunization effort should be. The CDC will consider this input as it makes recommendations about the upcoming program.

Space is limited. Registration is required and you must be able to attend the meeting for the entire day.
